Approval of will

(1) If testator knew and approved contents of will, it is immaterial if he mistook legal effect of the language used or that he acted on mistaken advice of counsel, provided that advice was given in an honest belief that it was sound

tor, or the reason for which a testator dislikes the natural objects of his bounty, does not render a will invalid <sup>18</sup>

Statutory provisions. Under a statute providing that a will executed under a mistake of fact as to the existence or conduct of an heir is inoperative so far as such heir is concerned, it has been held that a mistake of fact as to the conduct of the heirs at law of the testator will render inoperative portions of the will disinheriting such heirs, where such mistakes are caused by false statements made by a beneficiary under the will,<sup>19</sup> or misrepresentations made by other persons <sup>20</sup> It is not incumbent on the heir to show, however, that he would have been favorably mentioned in the will but for such mistake <sup>21</sup> Such a statute has been held to rest on the principle of mistake of fact as to the existence of the heir at law,<sup>22</sup> and not on a mistake of law as to any doubtful question of the rules of descent <sup>23</sup> For example, there is no mistake within the meaning of the statute when the testator knows of the existence of certain persons, but does not regard them as his heirs <sup>24</sup> The mistake, in order to be within the meaning of the statute, must be one of fact, not a mistake in reasoning from facts <sup>25</sup>

§ 224 What Constitutes Undue Influence

Generally, undue influence to avoid a will, must so overpower and subjugate the mind of the testator as to destroy his free agency and make him express the will of another rather than his own, and the mere presence of influence is not sufficient. Undue influence must be present or operative at the time of the execution of the will resulting in dispositions which the testator would not otherwise have made. In determining undue influence all facts and circumstances must be considered and no precise quantity of influence can be said to be necessary and sufficient in all cases.

It has been held impossible to describe with precision and exactness what is undue influence,<sup>26</sup> and what the quality and consent of the power of one mind over another must be to make it undue <sup>27</sup> Mere general or reasonable influence over a testator is not sufficient to invalidate a will; to have that effect the influence must be "undue" <sup>28</sup> While the rule as to what constitutes "undue influence" has been variously stated,<sup>29</sup> the substance of the different statements is that, to be sufficient to avoid a will, the influence exerted must be of a kind that so overpowers and subjugates the mind of the testator as to destroy his free agency and make him express the will of another, rather than his own,<sup>30</sup>

Various statements of elements of undue influence

(1) "Undue influence" is that kind of influence or supremacy of one mind over another by which the latter is prevented from acting according to his own wish or judgment

(2) Pressure, of whatever character, whether acting on fears or hopes, if so exerted as to overpower volition without convincing judgment is a species of constraint under which no will can be made

Conn—Lee v Horrigan, 98 A 2d 909, 140 Conn 232

(3) "Undue influence" in execution of will contemplates over-persuasion, coercion, or force that destroys or hampers the free agency and will power of a testator

(4) To authorize denial or revocation of probate of will on ground of "undue influence", there must be active use of such influence for purpose of execution of the will to such an extent as to coerce testator's mind, so that it cannot be said that testator was acting voluntarily of his own free will and volition

Fla—In re Peters' Estate, 20 So 2d 487, 155 Fla 453—In re Starr's Estate, 170 So 620, 125 Fla 536

(5) Association of the phrase "undue influence" with respect to invalidation of properly executed will in statute in the same context with the words "fraudulent practices upon testator's fears, affections, or sympathies, duress", shows that the influence spoken of, in order to be "undue influence", must be in the nature of fraud or duress

Ga—Boland v Aycock, 12 S E 2d 319, 191 Ga 327

(6) Influence obtained by flattery, importunity, superiority of will, mind, or character, or by whatever art that human thought, ingenuity, or cunning may employ which would give dominion over testator's will to such an extent as to destroy free agency or constrain him to do against his will what he is unable to refuse, is "undue influence" when exercised by any one immediately over the testamentary act, whether by direction or indirection, or obtained at one time or another

Ind—Van Ginkle v Mooy, 10 N E 2d 759, 104 Ind App 282

(7) The meaning of the word "undue" in the phrase "undue influence," is restricted and denotes something wrong, according to the standard of morals which the law enforces in relations of men, and in fact illegal, and qualifies the purpose with which influence is exercised or result which it accomplishes instrument,<sup>61</sup> and the result cannot be influenced by later occurrences<sup>62</sup>

Object It must be shown that the undue influence was exercised with the object of procuring a will in favor of particular parties<sup>63</sup>

Result In order to invalidate the will, it must be shown that the undue influence resulted in the making of testamentary dispositions which the testator would not otherwise have made<sup>64</sup>

Making of will Influence which is exerted merely to induce the making of a will, while leaving the testator free from influence as to the provisions of the will, is not undue influence in the legal sense<sup>65</sup>

Quantity of influence. Undue influence is not measured by degree or extent, but by its effect,<sup>66</sup> so that no precise quantity of influence can be said to be necessary and sufficient in all cases, as the amount necessarily varies with the circumstances of each case,<sup>67</sup> and especially it varies accordingly as the strength or weakness of the mind of each testator varies, as discussed infra § 233 character of the transaction,<sup>69</sup> the physical and mental condition of the testator, as discussed infra § 233, the relationship of the parties,<sup>70</sup> the means of coercion or influence employed,<sup>71</sup> and the motive behind the influence,<sup>72</sup> are elements for consideration on the question of undue influence. Further, undue influence is determined not in the light of what the court deems just, but in the light of what the testator really desired,<sup>73</sup> as it may consist of anything which subordinates the will of the testator.<sup>74</sup>

Injury to some one According to some authority, the undue influence which will vitiate a will must be influence which materially injures some one,<sup>75</sup> so that, where the testator divided his property equally among his children, there can be no complaint of undue influence.<sup>76</sup>

Unequal, unjust, or unnatural disposition. The fact that the will of a testator of admitted testamentary capacity disposes of his property in an unnatural manner,<sup>77</sup> unjustly,<sup>78</sup> or unequally,<sup>79</sup> and

Active agency of chief beneficiary in procuring a will, especially in absence of those having equal claim on bounty of testator, who is enfeebled by age and diseased, is a circumstance indicating the probable exercise of undue influence.

Ill—Mitchell v Van Scoyk, 115 NE 2d 226, 1 Ill 2d 160.

Although a change of testamentary scheme is an important circumstance on issue of undue influence, its force necessarily depends on its connection with other related facts.

N Y—In re Buttikofer's Will, 79 NY S 2d 252, affirmed 93 NY S 2d 920, 276 App Div 883.

Fixed determination and purpose

Will executed by a testator who had mind sufficient to appreciate the natural objects of his bounty, his duty to them, and to make a survey of his estate and to dispose of it according to a fixed determination and purpose would not be annulled on ground of undue influence.

Ky—Rueff v Light, 114 SW 2d 506, 272 Ky 449.

Undue influence, as used in will contest, is relative, that is, influence which reaches stage of being undue influence is not at all the same in every case, and, accordingly, every case must be viewed in its own particular setting.

Cal—In re Bucher's Estate, 120 P 2d 44, 48 Cal App 2d 465.

Undue influence which will defeat a will is largely a matter of inferences from circumstances surrounding testator, his life, character and mental condition and opportunity existing for exercise of improper control.

Grandchildren left destitute

A testator's disposition of his property would not be disturbed if he were not unduly influenced, notwithstanding grandchildren for whom no provision was made were allegedly left destitute.

Mo—Larkin v Larkin, 119 SW 2d 351.

Nieces

Nieces, who were uncle's only heirs, seeking to set aside uncle's will on ground of undue influence by chief beneficiary did not have claim on, nor could they expect to be remembered by, uncle as by father, with respect to significance of uncle's almost entirely eliminating nieces from will.

Questions presented

In determining whether will was result of undue influence, question is whether it was desire of testator that his property should be disposed of after his death as disposed of by the will, question is not whether will is such a will as, in opinion of jury or court, testator should have made under circumstances.

Wyo—In re Anderson's Estate, 255 P 2d 983, 71 Wyo 238.

Motive

Motive prompting testator to make bequest need not be meritorious to avoid invalidation thereof on ground of undue influence, only essential being that will prompting bequest be that of testator.

however much at variance with expressions by the testator concerning relatives or the natural objects of his bounty,<sup>80</sup> does not invalidate the will, unless undue influence was actually exercised on the testator

Codicil Where the codicil does not change the manner or extent of testamentary disposition in the will proper, it has been held that the question of undue influence must be determined solely by reference to acts bearing on the execution of the codicil<sup>81</sup>

§ 225. — Advice or Suggestions

Advice or suggestions addressed to the testator do not constitute undue influence unless so strongly and persistently urged that he is unable to resist adopting them

Mere advice or suggestions, addressed to the sound judgment of the testator and intelligently weighed and considered by him, do not constitute undue influence unless they are so strongly and persistently urged that the testator is unable to resist adopting them,<sup>82</sup> although the will might not have been made but for such advice or persuasion,<sup>83</sup> and this is especially true where the suggestion is directed only to the making of a will in general and not as to what it should contain<sup>84</sup> The making of a will need not originate with the testator, provided he intended it as his own will and understandingly adopts it<sup>85</sup> The testator has a right to seek advice from third persons, even though they are not lawyers<sup>86</sup>

Request of donor that the recipient dispose of the property in a certain way is not undue influence<sup>87</sup>

§ 226. — Importunity, Persuasion, or Solicitation

Influence consisting of appeals, requests, entreaties, arguments, flattery, cajolery, persuasion, solicitations, or even importunity becomes "undue" only when it is extended to such a degree as to override and destroy the free agency of the testator

Legal advice

In conferring with client on matters of bequest, attorney may suggest and advise when requested to do so, but from then on any effort to persuade or dissuade client takes on complexion of influence that may be found by a jury to be undue, particularly if object of bequest is also a client of attorney

§ 227. — Kindness and Attention, Love and Affection

Influence arising from acts of kindness, attention, and congenial intercourse, love or affection or desire to gratify one beloved, which does not seek to control the mind of the testator, is not undue influence

Influence arising from mere acts of kindness, attention, and congenial intercourse, which operate to secure or retain the affection, esteem, or goodwill of the testator, and induce him to make the persons performing such kindly offices beneficiaries in his will, do not constitute undue influence,<sup>91</sup> unless such acts are carried out with the purpose and design of subjecting the mind of the testator to the influence and the direction of the person exercising the influence, and thus deprive the testator of his free will, free act, and free agency<sup>92</sup> The application of this rule is not confined to relatives of the testator, but extends also to his friends<sup>93</sup> The influence arising from love, or affection, or desire to gratify one beloved, which does not seek to control the mind of the testator, is not undue influence<sup>94</sup>

§ 228. — Creation of Resentment and False Impressions in Mind of Testator

of alienating his affections and causing him to make certain testamentary dispositions of his property, the will may be declared void for undue influence, or fraud and undue influence combined.<sup>95</sup> It is essential, however, in order to avoid a will for undue influence of this nature, that the statements made be false,<sup>96</sup> that the testator be unable, through weakness of mind and body or concealment of the facts, to determine the falsity of the statements and resist the influence,<sup>97</sup> and that he rely and act on them rather than on other motives and inducements.<sup>98</sup> Where it is shown that the testator knew of the falsity of the representations and that he did not rely thereon, such attack fails.<sup>99</sup> A case of undue influence by a devisee over the testatrix with whom she lived, by false statements or suggestions, is not made out by mere proof that she acquiesced in the testatrix's views in respect of contestants, without proof that she knew, or at least had reason to believe, that the testatrix's prejudice was unwarranted by the facts.<sup>1</sup> Ordinarily, unkind words said about the contestant to the testator, not amounting to moral or physical coercion, do not constitute undue influence.<sup>2</sup>

a In general

b Personal relations

a. In General

A confidential relation exists whenever trust and confidence is reposed by the testator in the integrity and fidelity of another, but the existence of such relation between the testator and the favored beneficiary, standing alone, does not necessarily constitute undue influence

With respect to undue influence on a testator, the terms "confidential relation" and "fiduciary relation" are synonymous,<sup>6</sup> and exist whenever trust and confidence is reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another.<sup>7</sup> While blood relationship, is an important and material circumstance in considering

Searching examination

Mass—Doggett v Morse, 12 NE 2d 867, 299 Mass 383.

It is physician's duty to exercise highest degree of good faith in dealing with patient, particularly in mak-

due influence, as discussed infra § 239, but the question must be determined, as in all other cases, by ascertaining whether the free agency of the testator has been destroyed<sup>12</sup> The mere fact that the confidential advisor's character was evil, and his motives, with respect to the testatrix, were sinister, is insufficient to establish undue influence<sup>13</sup> A will made on the faith of a promise of the beneficiary, honestly made, to dispose of the property in a specified manner is not obtained by undue influence<sup>14</sup>

b. Personal Relations

It is natural and proper that persons occupying family relations should exercise some influence over each other so that the influence of a child or spouse in the making of a will, in the absence of a showing that it was improperly exercised, does not invalidate the will Where the principal or sole beneficiary prepares the will, such beneficiary should insist that the testator procure independent advice.

Influence to make a particular provision in the will, which is not of such a character as to overcome the will of the testator, emanating from a spouse,<sup>15</sup> or relative,<sup>16</sup> who does not benefit by such provision, is not undue influence so as to vitiate the will The influence of a child<sup>17</sup> or spouse<sup>18</sup> to make a will in their favor, in the absence of a showing that it was improperly exercised,<sup>19</sup> does not vitiate the will, even though there

Attorney-client

(1) In the law of wills the natural influence of the attorney over client may lawfully be asserted to obtain a will or legacy, as long as the testator thoroughly understands what he is doing, and is a free agent

Md—Sellers v Qualls, 110 A 2d 73

(2) The relationship between attorney and client is largely administrative, and relationship raising presumption of attorney's undue influence over client executing will drawn by attorney named as beneficiary therein arises only when attorney's mind is substituted for that of client

NJ—In re Nixon's Estate, 37 A 2d 295, 135 NJ Eq 117, affirmed 41 A 2d 119, 136 NJ Eq 242

(3) For an attorney to abuse obligation of responsibility to physically and mentally ill client, by permitting client to be mistaken to attorney's pecuniary advantage, is to make undue use of influence which trust relationship creates Where ninety-year-old ill testator stated that his personality did not amount to very much, and that attorney who was to prepare will should take personality, attorney was required to make careful search for information for testator, and, being reasonably certain as to quantum of personality, was required to bring facts clearly to testator's mind, to make will valid

Employment of attorney

Fact that principal beneficiary in consequence of confidential relation may have employed attorney to draw will, and furnished information as to what will should contain and kept will in safety deposit box without divulging contents thereof, would not invalidate will on ground of undue influence

Supporting fact

Existence of a confidential relation is only to be regarded as supporting a charge of undue influence where, in addition to proof of such relation and of a benefaction to, or in the interest of, the fiduciary, there are further circumstances to show activity on beneficiary's part in procuring execution of the will

Promise to wife

Alleged fact that testator promised his wife on her deathbed that he would not change the basic parts of his will did not per se indicate that the wife exercised undue influence on testator in the execution of his will

A wife may legitimately urge on her husband her views of the manner in which he should dispose of his property by will, and if she is able to convince him that what she urges is the proper thing for him to do, or otherwise inspire in him a real desire to do it, a finding of undue influence cannot be based on her urgency may be proof that such a provision would not have been made but for such importunity<sup>20</sup>

The mere fact that a wife guides or even dominates her husband, or has acquired an ascendancy over him, does not render his will, made in her favor, invalid<sup>21</sup> Indeed, it has been held to be natural and proper that persons occupying family relations should exercise some influence over each other and should remember each other in their wills,<sup>22</sup> and such influence is legitimate and should always exist and be encouraged<sup>23</sup> The influence of a spouse, however, may become undue if carried to the extent of overriding the testator's volition and destroying his free agency<sup>24</sup> The boundary where legitimate influence of a spouse ends and illegitimate persuasion or coercion begins varies with the circumstances of each case<sup>25</sup> It has been held that a particularly large bequest by a parent of a number of children to one having the opportunity unduly to influence the testator should be closely scrutinized<sup>26</sup>

Independent advice Where a testator retains an attorney to draft his will, making the attorney a beneficiary of a substantial portion of his estate, such attorney should prompt and insist that the testator procure independent advice,<sup>27</sup> but independent advice which is incompetent, or perfunctory, or given without adequate knowledge of the situation, will not suffice<sup>28</sup> Independent advice does not necessarily mean the advice of a lawyer, but it may consist of the advice of a disinterested competent person disassociated from the interest of the proposed beneficiary<sup>29</sup> The obtaining of independent advice by the testator has also been required with respect to a will prepared by a sole or principal beneficiary other than an attorney<sup>30</sup>

Under at least one statute, in order to uphold the validity of a will written or prepared by the sole or principal beneficiary, who at the time was the confidential agent or legal adviser of the testator, or who at the time occupied any other position of confidence or trust towards him, it must appear that the testator read or knew the contents of such will and had independent advice with reference thereto,<sup>31</sup> and by independent advice it is meant the benefit of a private conference with a competent and disinterested person<sup>32</sup> If, however, any one of the

Independent advice held not received

(1) Preparation of a will by attorney who shared offices with testatrix' attorney who was chief beneficiary of will, and who instructed the attorney preparing the will as to provisions to be included therein did not amount to independent advice, in determining whether the will was executed by undue influence

Legal advice

Such statute contemplates more than mere legal advice and does not require that the independent advice must be given by one admitted to the bar or by one shown to be well versed in all the intricacies of the subject of wills conditions precedent does not exist, the questions whether the testator read or knew the contents of the will,<sup>33</sup> and had independent advice with reference thereto,<sup>34</sup> becomes immaterial. Such a statute, therefore, has no application where the will was not prepared by the sole or principal beneficiary,<sup>35</sup> or to a principal beneficiary, who at the time of the writing of the will was not the confidential agent or legal adviser of testator, and who did not occupy any other position of confidence or trust towards him.<sup>36</sup>

§ 231. — Unlawful or Improper Relations

Moral turpitude is not an essential element of undue influence, and the mere existence of illicit relations between the testator and a beneficiary does not constitute undue influence.

The mere existence of illicit relations does not constitute undue influence.<sup>37</sup> Moral turpitude is not an essential element of undue influence,<sup>38</sup> and the mere fact that some influence is exercised by a person sustaining an improper or adulterous relation to the testator does not invalidate a will, unless it is further shown that the influence destroys the testator's free agency,<sup>39</sup> although while the same amount of influence when exercised by a wife might be proper, it may become "undue" when exercised by one occupying an improper and adulterous relation to the testator.<sup>40</sup> Such illegal relations are material only as bearing on the character of the beneficiary, which may be important in determining the effect of his influence.<sup>41</sup>

§ 232. — Threats

Threats to the testator producing fear and destroying his free agency constitute undue influence.

Threats of violence,<sup>42</sup> litigation,<sup>43</sup> criminal prosecution,<sup>44</sup> or other matters producing fear,<sup>45</sup> which place the mind of the testator in subjection and destroy his free agency, constitute undue influence and invalidate a will made as a result of them.

§ 233. — Mental Condition of Testator

The physical and mental condition of the testator is important in considering the existence of undue influence, since conduct which might be held insufficient to influence unduly a person of normal mental strength might be sufficient to operate on a failing mind. The mere fact that a testator is eccentric, or dislikes some of the natural objects of his bounty, does not establish undue influence.

Although undue influence presupposes testamentary capacity,<sup>46</sup> the physical and mental condition

Reason for rule

(1) "The underlying idea in 'undue influence' is that the will of another is substituted for that of the testator. If the testator have no will or testamentary capacity, there can be no substitution of another's will for that of the testator."

Idaho—Gwin v Gwin, 48 P 295, 298, 5 Idaho 271

Mo—Corpus Juris cited in Powell v Raleigh, App, 244 S W 2d 387, 389

(2) Undue influence in its essential elements has no real relation to mental incapacity, since mental incapacity implies lack of intelligent mental power to make a will, while undue influence implies within itself existence of a mind of sufficient mental capacity to make a will, if not hindered by dominant influence of another in such a way as to make the instrument speak the will of the person exercising undue influence, and not that of the testator.

of the testator is of primary importance in considering the existence of undue influence,<sup>47</sup> and that which would not be such undue influence as to avoid a will in the case of a person of sound mind, good health, and intelligence may be such when exercised on a person of failing mind, poor health, and other mental and bodily enfeeblements<sup>48</sup> Mere soundness of mind and body, however, does not imply immunity from undue influence<sup>49</sup> Notwithstanding the susceptibility of a weakened mental state to yield to undue influence, in order to invalidate a will because of such influence on a testator who is in such a mental state, it must be shown that influence was exerted which destroyed his free agency<sup>50</sup> Whether influence over an extremely aged testator, having a weak mind and suffering from serious, disabling physical illness, was such as to overcome his will and control, depends on the circumstances of each case.<sup>51</sup>

Eccentricity. The mere fact that a testator is highly eccentric, filthy, forgetful, miserly, or inattentive, does not compel a conclusion of susceptibility to undue influence<sup>52</sup>

Dislikes. The fact that the testator was prejudiced against, or had an aversion for, some of the natural objects of his bounty does not establish undue influence,<sup>53</sup> unless the grievance was engendered or intensified by the beneficiary under the will<sup>54</sup>

§ 234. Subsequent Ratification of Will

In some jurisdictions, a will is not void where it appears that, after its execution, the testator recognized or ratified the will in some way, although there is also authority to the contrary

According to some authority, a will will not be declared void when it appears that, after the execution of the will, the testator became free from the fraud or undue influence and then recognized or ratified the will in some way,<sup>55</sup> as by leaving it uncanceled for a long time,<sup>56</sup> or by republishing the will<sup>57</sup> Where the testator has had the unhampered opportunity to revoke his will subsequent to the operation of an undue influence on him, but makes no change in it, the court as a general rule considers the effect of the testimony bearing on undue influence in a large measure destroyed<sup>58</sup> There is authority to the contrary, however, holding that a will once void for fraud or undue influence is always void unless it has been revived by republication<sup>59</sup>

§ 235. Origin of, and Persons Chargeable With, Undue Influence

In some jurisdictions undue influence may invalidate a will in favor of someone other than the person exerting such influence, although the beneficiary was ignorant thereof Elsewhere, the influence must emanate from the beneficiaries or those interested in them

One charged with exercising undue influence over the testator need not be a beneficiary under the contested will,<sup>60</sup> and undue influence may invalidate a will in favor of someone other than the person exerting such influence<sup>61</sup> In some jurisdictions it has been held that a will may be invalidated because of undue influence of which the beneficiary was ignorant,<sup>62</sup> and that it is immaterial whether or not the influence was exerted at the request or with the consent of the beneficiary,<sup>63</sup> although elsewhere it has been held that, to vitiate a will, the influence must emanate from the beneficiaries or those interested in them<sup>64</sup> The exercise of effort which produces the will need not be by the beneficiary directly but may be through an agency,<sup>65</sup> or by a third person.<sup>66</sup>

In at least one jurisdiction it has been held that a boy twelve years of age could not be charged with undue influence<sup>67</sup> Persons may exercise undue influence in behalf of a charitable or religious institution so as to nullify a will made in pursuance thereof<sup>68</sup>

of the provisions of a will are void for fraud or undue influence the whole will is not necessarily rendered invalid, and the portions not affected may be given effect

Since a will is rendered invalid by fraud, or undue influence, as discussed supra § 221, or mistake, supra 223, the will is invalid even though the fraud or undue influence may have been exercised by only one of the beneficiaries,<sup>69</sup> or by persons who were not named in the will at all.<sup>70</sup> Undue influence exercised by anyone, whether he or another gains by its exercise, renders worthless the will thus procured,<sup>71</sup> and in legal effect, such an instrument is not a will at all.<sup>72</sup> The effect of declaring the whole will void because of undue influence is to render ineffectual a clause therein revoking all former wills.<sup>73</sup>

Partial invalidity In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, it is generally held that, where some of the provisions of a will are void for fraud or undue influence, which can be separated from the valid parts of the will without doing injustice to the beneficiaries,<sup>74</sup> or impairing the general intent of the testator,<sup>75</sup> the whole will is not rendered invalid, and the portions not affected with undue influence will be given effect.<sup>76</sup> Under a statute providing that, in a will contest case, the issue shall be made up whether or not the writing produced is the will of the testator, it has been held that the will produced must be free from undue influence in its entirety or it is not his will at all.<sup>77</sup>

Noncontesting clause Where a will is void because of undue influence, a provision therein prohibiting heirs from contesting it has been held also to be invalid.<sup>78</sup>

§ 237. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In Kentucky

(1) In considering whether a presumption of undue influence is ever created with a resulting shift in the burden of proof, it has been held that neither opportunity to exercise undue influence nor the existence of confidential relations between a testator and a beneficiary, or both are enough in and of themselves to justify the judicial conclusion that the instrument is not a freely executed will, nor is merely an unjust or unnatural disposition of an estate, or even the exclusion of a child who is normally the object of the testator's bounty, sufficient to justify that conclusion. These conditions, however, have a cumulative effect, and where the beneficiary exercised control of the testator and was actively concerned with the preparation of the will of one whose mental faculties were so impaired as to render him susceptible to selfish or improper influence, and the will is grossly unreasonable and plainly inconsistent with the testator's natural and moral duty to his family and is opposed to his express purpose, the circumstances are indeed persuasive, and if all of these factors are present, there is a presumption of fact, although not conclusive, that the instrument was not executed by a free and unhampered will and a fixed purpose. This statement as to the rise of a presumption or inference of fact is but to say that it transfers the burden of persuasion to the proponents of the will. The unfolding of the story reaches a stage where reason suggests that conditions were not what they would have been normally. To avoid confusion, it may be interpolated that this presumption is not a presumption of law and does not relieve the contestants of continuing to carry the burden of proof. #### Prior wills

Where a will is being contested on the ground of undue influence and the proponent of the will introduces in evidence several earlier wills to establish that such wills were not substantially different from the latest will, the proponent did not have the burden of proving that the earlier wills were executed voluntarily and without undue influence. Mo—Pulitzer v Chapman, 85 SW 2d 400, 337 Mo 298

Will already admitted to probate

Where a will has been admitted to probate without contest, and subsequently a suit is brought to set aside the will on the ground of undue influence, the person seeking to set aside the will has the burden of proving the charge of undue influence by a preponderance of the evidence.

Tex—Jowers v. Smith, Civ App, 237 SW 2d 805

In Georgia

(1) On the issue of devisavit vel non the burden of proof in the first instance is on the propounder of the alleged will to make out a prima facie case by showing, together with other facts, that in making the will the testator acted freely and voluntarily.

(2) In a proceeding contesting the validity of a will which has been admitted to probate the burden of never shifts,<sup>85</sup> although, where the contestant establishes a prima facie case, the person charged with fraud or undue influence has the burden of meeting it.<sup>86</sup> Where the circumstances surrounding the proof of undue influence which is on the proponent of the will only requires in the first instance that the proponent introduce evidence that the will has been admitted to probate

Miss—O'Bannon v Henrich, 4 So 2d 208, 191 Miss 815—Sheehan v Kearney, 21 So 41, 82 Miss 688, 35 LRA 102

(3) If the validity of a will which has not been admitted to probate is contested on the issue of undue influence the burden of proof of undue influence which is on the proponent of the will only requires that the proponent prove originally due execution of the will and the capacity of the testator to make a will, and this will raise a presumption that the will was voluntarily executed

Primary and ultimate burden

The primary and ultimate burden of proving use of undue influence on a person executing a will devolves on party who alleges it

NJ—In re Fllo's Will, 75 A 2d 517, 9 N J Super 146

Ultimate burden on contestant

Even though a presumption of undue influence arises, the ultimate burden of producing conviction still must be discharged by the person contesting the validity of the will, but he has the benefit of the presumption of irregularity

Or—In re Rupert's Estate, 54 P 2d 274, 152 Or 649

Burden of proof always on contestant

When proof is made which is sufficient to create a presumption of undue influence it casts on the proponent, if he is to sustain the will, the necessity of showing that the execution of the will was the result of free deliberation on the part of the testator and of the deliberate exercise of his judgment, and not an imposition or wrong practiced by the trusted beneficiary, but this does not change the general rule, which is, that on the whole case, the burden of proof is on the contestant to establish undue influence by the whole evidence

Ill—Tidholm v Tidholm, 62 NE 2d 473, 391 Ill 19

NJ—In re Neuman's Estate, 32 A 2d 826, 133 N JEq 532

Burden not shifted to contestant

If the statutory requirements of due execution are made to appear, the burden ordinarily would rest on the contestant to go forward with the evidence, but if it appears that the draftsman of the will held a position of trust and confidence with the testator, and if he is a major beneficiary under the will, and if the testator was sick and inclined to yield readily to persuasion, there is a presumption of fraud, and in such a case neither the burden of proof nor the burden of producing evidence shift to the contestant.

If none of the evidentiary requirements necessary to create a presumption of undue influence are established, the burden of proof on that issue does not shift to the proponent of the will

Cal—In re Hiker's Estate, 194 P 2d 132, 8 Cal App 2d 680

Explanation of facts better known to proponent

The presumption of undue influence is of that class of presumptions by which a litigant is called on to make known facts more easily accessible to him than to his adversary, and, therefore, where a presumption of undue influence is created, the law puts on the proponent the burden of coming forward with credible evidence satisfactorily explaining his conduct, and stating what he knows as to the making of the will

NJ—In re Weeks' Estate, 103 A 2d 43, 29 N J Super 533

Use of technical terminology

The use of technical or other language which would not have been used by the testator himself raises no presumption of undue influence since it is common for wills to be drawn by some one other than the testator, and even though the words may be those of the scrivener, the disposition of the property is that of the one who adopts them, and if he understands the effect of the instrument as a whole, it is not

Presumption of undue influence

Where the circumstances connected with the execution of a will are such as the law regards with suspicion, the burden of proof on the issue of undue influence is shifted to the proponent of the will, and he must show affirmatively that the will was not secured by such means, and, indeed it has been held that in such situation the law raises a presumption of undue influence, which establishes prima facie the existence of it, and is sufficient to defeat the will unless and until it is overcome by counter proof. Generally speaking, the doctrine is applicable where a relationship of trust and confidence obtains between the testator and the beneficiary, or where the latter has gained an influence or ascendancy over the former, and usually, but not always, it appears that the beneficiary has procured the will to be made or has advised as to its provisions, and there are certain modifications to the doctrine which affect the relationships of husband and wife, or parent and child

Burden on proponent to meet prima facie case

Where circumstances raise a presumption that the will was procured by undue influence, the proponents have the burden of meeting that prima facie case, but it is sufficient if they produce just enough evidence to counterbalance the prima facie case, and it is not necessary for them to prove the absence of undue influence by a preponderance of the evidence

Burden of going forward with proof

Although there is no presumption of undue influence, and no resulting shift in the burden of proof, there may be a shift in the burden of going forward with the evidence

Ky—Kiefer's Ex'r and Ex'x v Deibel, 166 SW 2d 430, 292 Ky 318

Burden of proof and burden of going forward

Where presumption of undue influence is erected, both the burden of proof and the burden of going forward with proof shift to proponent and are identical and coincident, and proponent must establish by preponderance of proof that there is no undue influence

Contestant entitled to verdict

Proof that fiduciary relationship exists between testator and beneficiary who received a substantial benefit from will, that testator was dependent and devisee the dominant party and that testator reposed trust and confidence in beneficiary, or that preparation of will was procured by beneficiary, established prima facie the charge that execution of will was result of undue influence exercised by that beneficiary and such proof, standing alone, entitles contestant to a verdict

Clear and convincing proof required

In proceeding to contest will prepared by proponent and under which he profited, where relationship of trust and confidence existed between proponent and testatrix, the burden was on proponent to show by clear and convincing proof that proponent did not abuse the trust and confidence reposed in him

§ 239 — Confidential and Personal Relations

Ordinarily the mere fact that a confidential or fiduciary relation exists between a testator and a person who benefits by the will does not create a presumption of undue influence with a resulting shift in the burden of proof, but the presumption may arise, and the burden of proof may shift, if, in addition, there are suspicious circumstances, such as the fact that the beneficiary actively participated in the procuring, preparation, or execution of the will, or the fact that the testator's mentality was impaired

While broad general statements have been made to the effect that the existence of a confidential relation between the testator and a beneficiary under his will creates a presumption of undue influence and casts the burden of showing freedom from restraint on the beneficiary,<sup>91</sup> the generally accepted rule is that a presumption of undue influence is not raised and the burden of proof is not shifted by the mere fact that a beneficiary occupies, with respect to the testator, a confidential or fiduciary relation,<sup>92</sup> such as that which exists with respect to

Combined with other circumstances

In determining the fact of undue influence, the court may consider the opportunity of exercising such influence, the active participation of the person in the preparation of the will, the confidential relationship between the beneficiary and the testator, the disinheritance of those whom the testator probably would have remembered in his will, the singularity of the provisions of the will, and the exercise of influence or persuasion to induce the testator to make the will in question, and the existence of these conditions alone or combined only create a presumption or inference of undue influence Minn—In re Rasmussen's Estate, 69 NW 2d 630

Confidential relations creating presumption

The existence of a confidential relation between the testator and a legatee or devisee, such as guardian and ward, physician and patient, or spiritual adviser and layman gives peculiar opportunity for unduly influencing the mind of the testator and creates a presumption that such influence may have been exercised, and in such case the law casts on him the burden of showing that the will was the free and voluntary act of the testator

Tenn—Solari v. Albertine, 193 SW 2d 111, 29 Tenn App 61

Public policy requirements

"There is no public policy condemning the receipt of a bequest by one who stood in a fiduciary relationship to the giver. Such a policy would impose an unwarranted restriction on the testamentary alienation of property and would prevent a testator from bestowing gifts on his closest friends and confidants, who often have stronger than kinsmen's claims on his bounty. The law wisely casts upon a legatee standing in a confidential relation to a testator the burden of proving that he used no undue influence to secure the legacy and this rule satisfies all the applicable requirements of 'public policy' "

Physician and business manager

Even though it is shown that the confidential fiduciary relation of patient and his physician and business manager existed between the testator and a leading beneficiary, the burden of proof on the issue of undue influence was technically on the proponents of the will Fla.—In re Aldrich's Estate, 3 So.2d 856, 148 Fla. 121

Activity in procuring execution

Where principal beneficiary under will was testatrix' physician, principal beneficiary occupied a fiduciary relationship toward testatrix, but mere fact that such relationship existed was not sufficient to raise presumption against him of undue influence, in absence of showing that beneficiary was active in procuring drafting or execution of the will

Presumption offset by order of probate

If any presumption of undue influence arose by reason of the fact that the testator's physician was named beneficiary under the will, such presumption would be offset by the provision that an order of the probate court admitting the will to probate is prima facie evidence of the due attestation, execution, and validity of the will, and the contestant would still have the burden of showing the invalidity of the will by a preponderance of the evidence

Lack of independent advice

A controlling or strong point is the fact that there is no showing that the testator had any independent advice in connection with a will which gives a principal part of his estate to a person with whom he had a highly confidential relationship

Okla—Anderson v Davis, 256 P 2d 1099, 208 Okl 477

Obtaining independent advice

Any presumption of undue influence arising out of the fiduciary relationship between testatrix and the principal beneficiary would be overcome by the fact that at the time the will was executed the testatrix had the benefit of legal and independent advice

Executing will in unknown language

Where a confidential relation exists between the testatrix and the sole beneficiary, and it is shown that the will the testatrix executed was in English, a language she could neither read nor write, and that the will conformed to the law of California but not to the law of Germany although it was executed in Germany where the testatrix at all times resided, and the activity of the beneficiary in sending the drafts of the will to Germany for the testatrix to copy was shown, there would be a presumption of undue influence on the part of the beneficiary

Circumstances not sufficient to raise presumption

(1) Where a widow inherits the estate of her husband as sole heir at law, and the husband's former partner is administrator of the estate and in his administration perpetrates fraud on the widow, and subsequently the widow dies leaving a substantial portion of the estate to her husband's administrator, his fraud in the administration of the husband's estate would not create a presumption that he had exerted fraud or undue influence on the widow with respect to her own last will and testament

Ga—Marlin v Hill, 15 SE 2d 473, 192 Ga 434

(2) The fact that one of the beneficiaries had at times acted as investment counsel to the testatrix and had advised her on other matters would not raise a presumption of undue influence

Vt—Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co v Froment, 49 A 2d 111, 114 Vt 523

(3) Fact that testatrix was colored and beneficiary white would neither raise nor support an inference of undue influence justifying setting aside the will where beneficiary was a neighbor and friend and had interested herself in testatrix' welfare for several years

Or—In re Perry's Estate, 181 P 2d 783, 181 Or 332

Beneficiary retaining testator's will

(1) Where a confidential relation existed between the testator and the beneficiary it has been held that a presumption of undue influence may arise from the circumstance, among others, that the beneficiary retained the will in his possession

Doctrine to be applied with circumspection

The doctrine that it will be presumed that the beneficiary exercised undue influence on the testator where the evidence indicates that a confidential relationship existed between the two individuals, and that the beneficiary was actively concerned in the preparation of the will, will be applied with circumspection since it will be assumed that every testator has confidence in those to whom he makes a bequest or a devise, and in many of them he also, no doubt, reposes trust and reliance, and, in fact, all to whom a testator gives the larger bequests and devises invariably have won his confidence, and furthermore, it is not unlikely that the wife, son, daughter, and others in whom the testator has confidence will be in some manner concerned about the preparation of the will, especially if it is made in the course of an illness. The truth of the matter is that bequests and devises to those in whom the testator has confidence and who have won his affection are more likely to be free from undue influence than bequests and devises to others

Or—In re Knutson's Will, 41 P 2d 793, 149 Or 467

Suspicion not equivalent to presumption

The relations which excite suspicion in transactions inter vivos, that is, friendship, confidence and trust, affection, personal obligations, may and usually do justify and properly give direction to testamentary dispositions. All that can be said is the existence of a confidential relation, such as that of guardian and ward, religious advisor and layman, and the like, affords peculiar opportunity for unduly exercising influence over the mind, and where the dominant party, in such relation, initiates the preparation of the will or gives directions as to its contents to the scrivener or writes it himself, in other words, is active either in its preparation or execution, and is made a beneficiary thereunder, a suspicion arises that the benefaction may have resulted from the exertion of undue influence over the testator rather than from his free volition; but such suspicion does not amount to a presumption

Amanuensis a beneficiary

(1) From the fact that the testator's secretary, a beneficiary, wrote the will at the testator's dictation, thus merely responding to his commands, it cannot be urged that she was active in procuring the execution of the will

Ala—Council v Mayhew, 55 So 314, 172 Ala 295

(2) Even if a fiduciary relation existed between the testator and the beneficiary who was the testator's private secretary, such fact alone would not be sufficient to cast on her the burden of showing an absence of fraud and undue influence, and it would be necessary to show that she was in some way instrumental in procuring the execution of the will, and where all that is shown is that she performed ordinary secretarial duties in taking and transcribing notes and following the directions of the testator, such activities obviously cannot constitute a participation in the transaction within the meaning of the rule creating a presumption of undue influence

Favored beneficiary

The "favored beneficiary" rule is to the effect that where a confidential relationship exists between a testator and a favored beneficiary, activity by the favored beneficiary in the preparation and execution of the will raises a presumption of undue influence and casts the burden of proof on the beneficiary, and within the meaning of this rule, a "favored beneficiary" is one who, in the circumstances of the particular case, has been favored over others having equal claim to the testator's bounty

Distribution not necessarily unjust

Provisions of a will are not to be considered unnatural or unjust so as to raise a presumption of undue influence because a legacy to a sister is substantially smaller than the legacy to a woman who had served the testator efficiently as housekeeper and nurse for a small wage, and with whom the testator maintained a confidential relation

Cal—In re Velladao's Estate, 88 P. 2d 187, 31 Cal App 2d 355

Transfer of property of another

Where testatrix is obligated by a valid oral contract to execute a will in favor of her son-in-law, but in violation of such contract she executes a will in favor of one who stands in a fiduciary relationship with her, there would be a presumption that the beneficiary under the will exerted undue influence on the testatrix

Cal—West v Stainback, 240 P 2d 366, 108 Cal App 2d 806

Claim of collateral heirs to testatrix' bounty

Where a confidential relation existed between testatrix and the beneficiary under the will, and where the next of kin of the testatrix were collateral heirs, the pretermitted next of kin, in order to show the will to be unnatural to create a presumption of undue influence, would be required to show affirmatively that they had peculiar or superior claims to the decedent's bounty

Cal—In re Easton's Estate, 35 P 2d 614, 140 Cal App 367

Exclusion of natural object of testator's bounty

(1) Where the natural object of the testator's bounty is excluded under unduly profited by the will<sup>14</sup>

Before there can be room for the application of any of these rules it is necessary to show that the facts and circumstances which it is contended create a presumption of undue influence were directly connected with the execution of the instrument and were operating at the time the will was made,<sup>15</sup> and it is also necessary that there be a fiduciary or confidential relationship between the parties,<sup>16</sup> which was in existence at or prior to the time the will was made,<sup>17</sup> and that the person occupying such a relationship toward the testator take a substan-

from participation in his estate, where a stranger supplants children, and the will is in favor of the lawyer drawing and advising as to its provisions, or the guardian having charge of the testator's person and estate, or is in favor of a person occupying a clearly analogous position of trust, there is imposed on the proponents of the will, on the trial of the issue, the obligation of disproving the actual exercise of undue influence

(2) Where one standing in a confidential relation with the testatrix is the chief beneficiary under her will, slight circumstances of undue influence will cast the burden of proof on the beneficiary, and the burden of proof will shift to the beneficiary where it is shown that the testatrix, after consulting with the beneficiary's attorney, decided to take from the natural objects of her bounty what she had given them by her earlier wills, and conferred what she had thus taken away on the beneficiary

One factor among others

Where it was shown that the relations between the beneficiary and the testatrix afforded the beneficiary an opportunity to control the testamentary act and the physical condition of testatrix was such as to permit of a subversion of her freedom of will, and the beneficiary was active in procuring the instrument to be executed, and in addition the beneficiary unduly profited under the provisions of the will, while none of these circumstances standing alone will have the effect of creating a presumption against the validity of the instrument, their probative force in combination is to impose on the proponent the obligation of presenting evidence of volition

Benefaction as grounds for presumption

While one of the bases for the permissible inference of undue influence is benefaction, some pecuniary benefit to be derived, directly or indirectly, under the will by the fiduciary, there must be something more than the existence of the fiduciary relation and the benefaction to or in the interest of the fiduciary

In New Jersey

(1) It has been held that a presumption of undue influence arises from the existence of the attorney and client relationship between the beneficiary and the testator, even tionship which exists between a testator and the person who is beneficiary under the testator's will is that of attorney and client, does not, of itself, create a presumption that the bequest to the attorney-beneficiary was the result of undue influence,<sup>35</sup> and the fact that the attorney-beneficiary participated in the drawing of the will does not necessarily create the presumption,<sup>36</sup> even though the will makes little or no provision for the natural objects of the testator's bounty,<sup>37</sup> but such a presumption may arise from the fact that the attorney-beneficiary actively participated in the procuring, preparation, or execution of the will.<sup>38</sup> In order to give rise to the presumption of undue influence the attorney must though the attorney-beneficiary declined to take any part in the preparation or execution of the will, and the will was prepared and the execution attended by independent counsel

N J—In re Hopper's Estate, 88 A 2d 193, 9 N J 280

(2) It has also been held that a presumption of undue influence arises from the existence of the attorney and client relationship between the beneficiary and the testator where the attorney-beneficiary was legal adviser in the preparation and execution of the will

N J—In re Bartles' Will, 13 A 2d 642, 127 N J Eq 472, amended on other grounds 19 A 2d 17, 129 N J Eq 280

(3) Under such circumstances the burden of proof is on the beneficiary-attorney

N J—In re Bartles' Will, 19 A 2d 17, 129 N J Eq 280

(4) In earlier cases it was held that an attorney who draws or actively participates in the making of his client's will, by which he substantially benefits, has the burden cast on him of establishing that it was not the result of undue influence

N J—In re Bishop's Will, 125 A 384, 96 N J Eq 595—Farnum v Boyd, 41 A 422, 56 N J Eq 766

(5) In a case where the confidential relationship between the testator and the beneficiary was that of attorney and client it was stated that there were New Jersey cases which would seem to hold that the mere existence of such relationship places the burden of proving that the will was the free act of the testator on the proponent, but the court further stated that, "This is not the true rule and these cases, as well as others, enunciating such rule (e g., In re Bishop's Will, 96 N J Eq 595, 125 A 384) are disapproved in this particular"

N J—In re Nixon's Will, 41 A 2d 119, 136 N J Eq 242

(6) Thus, the general rule that no presumption of undue influence arises because of the existence of a confidential relationship between a testator and the beneficiary under the testator's will has been applied in cases where the beneficiary was the attorney for the testator, and drafted and took part in the execution of the will, and it has been held that some additional fact must be established to impose on the attorney-beneficiary the burden of proof

N J—In re Davis' Will, 101 A 2d 521, 14 N J 166

In re Nixon's Will, 41 A 2d 119, 136 N J Eq 242—In re Heim's Will, 40 A 2d 651, 136 N J Eq 138

(7) If in addition to the attorney and client relationship existing between the beneficiary and the testator, it is shown that the testator's mentality was so enfeebled that it could not well resist improper influence, or solicitude and action on the part of the dominant mind to see that the will was prepared and executed, or an arrangement for the presence of particular testamentary witnesses, or some such self-serving and suspicious element, the burden of proof will shift to the attorney who is the beneficiary under the will

N J—In re Heim's Will, supra

(8) Where a testatrix made members of the immediate family of her attorney the beneficiaries under her will, the fact that the will remained in her attorney's custody from the date of its execution until the death of the testatrix did not require a presumption of undue influence

Where the confidential relationship which exists between the testator and the beneficiary is that of attorney and client, if the beneficiary has in some way been actively concerned in the preparation and execution of the will, such fact casts on the beneficiary the burden of disproving undue influence, and such rule should not only include the situation where the one actively concerned in the preparation and execution of the will is a beneficiary, but also where a member of such person's immediate family is named as a beneficiary

Where an attorney is informed by his client that she desires to make a will in the attorney's favor, and he has his office associate draft the will, the attorney furnishes the associate with the necessary information, and the testatrix is given no independent advice, there would be a presumption that the will was the result of undue influence, and the burden of proof would rest on the attorney to show that he did not abuse the confidence reposed in him and that the execution of the will was the free and voluntary act of the testatrix

Balancing evidence essential

When a presumption of undue influence is raised by showing the existence of a confidential relationship, coupled with activity on the part of the proponent of a will, a prima facie showing of undue influence is thereby established which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, necessarily has the effect of invalidating the will because it is then not the result of the free will or volition of the testator, and it logically follows that the presumption necessarily results in invalidating the will on that account, and under such circumstances the presumption becomes controlling. To overcome that prima facie showing it becomes necessary for the proponent to rebut the presumption by evidence which, at least, will have the effect of balancing the prima facie showing, or the will must be denied probate

Cal.—In re Hansen's Estate, 100 P.2d 776, 138 Cal. App. 2d 99

Not conclusive presumption

A presumption of undue influence is by no means a conclusive presumption, but is one that may be overcome by evidence such as will lead the court to conclude that no undue influence was exerted

Okl.—In re Harjoche's Estate, 146 P.2d 130, 193 Okl. 631—In re Anderson's Estate, 286 P. 17, 142 Okl. 197.

Absence of rebutting evidence

The presumption of undue influence which arises from a confidential relation shifts the burden of proof to the proponents to overcome it. When the presumption is present and no evidence is offered to overcome it the court or jury is bound to find in accordance with the presumption. Whether this is a finding of fact or a conclusion of law is not material. It has some of the elements of both, but it is a rule of law and a rule of property which cannot lightly be cast aside. If the undue influence is thus proved to exist the contestants are entitled to a judgment

Cal.—In re Johnson's Estate, 87 P.2d 900, 31 Cal. App. 2d 251

No weight as evidence

Assuming that a fiduciary relationship existed between the testator and the beneficiary under his will, and that a presumption of undue influence resulted, the presumption would be rebuttable and there would be no shifting in the burden of proof, while the presumption would establish a prima facie case in the absence of testimony on the subject, it would have no weight as evidence, it would be rebuttable, and it could not be weighed against the evidence

not to make the presumption disappear, but to raise an issue for the jury.<sup>52</sup>

§ 240. — Unlawful or Improper Relations

No presumption of undue influence arises merely because there was an unlawful, meretricious, or adulterous relation between the testator and the person who benefits by the will

The fact that a testator or testatrix had maintained an unlawful, meretricious, or adulterous relation with a person receiving a legacy, or with a relative of such person, has been held not to authorize a presumption of undue influence by such person,<sup>53</sup> and, so too, the fact that a devisee was associated with the person making the will in an immoral environment<sup>54</sup> and was present at the execution of the will<sup>55</sup> has been held not to give rise to an inference of undue influence.

Presumption varying in strength

Because the presumption of undue influence is fortified by policy, the proponent must prove to the satisfaction of the trier of fact that there was no undue influence, but there are cases where the presumption is so heavily weighted with policy that the courts have demanded a sterner measure of proof than that usually obtaining on civil issues, and such is the situation where an attorney benefits by the will of his client, and especially where he draws it himself

Not rule of procedure

Presumption of undue influence arising from proof of fiduciary relation in will contest is not a mere procedural rule but rests on substantial basis of fact or inference, and presumption, with its underlying facts or inferences, once being in case, can never disappear, but raises issue for jury

Mo—Pulitzer v Chapman, 85 S W 2d 400, 337 Mo 298

Presumption destroyed

Where presumption of undue influence in procuring execution of will arises from confidential relationship of parties and other circumstances evidence to the contrary which, if uncontradicted, is sufficient to support a finding, destroys the presumption, and the matter is then to be determined on all the facts freed from the presumption.

§ 241. — Writing or Preparation of Will by Beneficiary or Relative of Beneficiary

Undue influence is not necessarily presumed because a beneficiary took part in the preparation or execution of the testator's will, but the activity of the beneficiary may be such as to give rise to the presumption

A presumption of undue influence is not necessarily created because a beneficiary took part in the preparation of the testator's will,<sup>56</sup> or because of the presence of the beneficiary at the execution of the will,<sup>57</sup> particularly if the beneficiary was a relative of the testator,<sup>58</sup> and no presumption arises where the devise or bequest was to relatives of the person writing the will<sup>59</sup> However, a will drawn or executed under such conditions is subject to close judicial scrutiny,<sup>60</sup> and the active part taken by the beneficiary may be such that a presumption of undue influence will arise which the beneficiary will have the burden of rebutting,<sup>61</sup> and this is especially true

§ 242. — Unequal, Unjust, or Unnatural Disposition

As a general rule, the mere fact that a will makes unreasonable testamentary provisions, as where there is an unequal or unjust distribution of the estate among the natural objects of the testator's bounty, or where some or all of them are excluded from a share in the estate, does not create a presumption of undue influence and result in a shift in the burden of proof

An unjust will does not of itself raise a presumption of undue influence,<sup>62</sup> and ordinarily neither the unreasonableness of testamentary provisions,<sup>63</sup> nor gross inequality in the distribution of the estate,<sup>64</sup> will raise a presumption of fraud or undue influence, or result in a shift in the burden of proof.<sup>65</sup> Furthermore, such a result does not follow from the mere fact that a will makes an unequal or unjust distribution of the testator's estate among the natural objects of his bounty,<sup>66</sup> or because the testator makes an unnatural disposition of his estate by excluding part or all of the natural objects of his bounty,<sup>67</sup> because an heir fails to get what was expected,<sup>68</sup> because a will makes a disposition of property which is not in accordance with the statutes of descent,<sup>69</sup> or because it provides more than would have been obtained under dower and homestead laws.<sup>70</sup> However, a will containing unjust or unnatural provisions demands close judicial scrutiny,<sup>71</sup> and the proponents have the burden of giving some reasonable explanation of the unequal or unnatural provisions of the will where they are coupled with suspicious circumstances,<sup>72</sup> as where there is also evidence of weakness of mind on the part of the testator and fraud or undue influence on the part of the devisees,<sup>73</sup> or where the provisions of the will are grossly unreasonable, and plainly inconsistent with the testator's duty to his family.<sup>74</sup> An inference of undue influence may be drawn from a will which makes disproportionate gifts to strangers of the blood.<sup>75</sup> Furthermore, a will which makes an unnatural, unjust, or unfair distribution of the testator's estate by unduly benefiting those who have little or no claim by reason of relationship to the testator's bounty, and by excluding in whole or in part those who have a substantial claim by reason of relationship to the testator's bounty, may give rise to a presumption of fraud or undue influence,<sup>76</sup> but the rule that a large gift in a will to a stranger to the testator's blood raises a presumption of undue influence is to be invoked only where there is clear proof of the weakened intellect of the testator.<sup>77</sup>

§ 243. — Discrepancy Between Will and Prior Will or Declared Intention

A presumption may arise that a will was the result of undue influence where there is a substantial discrepancy between the provisions of the will and the testator's stated fixed intentions, whether the testator's intentions were expressed by a prior will or otherwise

A discrepancy between a fixed purpose of the testator, expressed in his declared intentions, and the provisions of the will, which are favorable to those in close relation to him at the time of its execution, and who have opportunity unduly to influence him, casts on the beneficiary the burden of showing that the will was not the product of undue influence,<sup>78</sup> but merely because a will varies from expressions of the testator with respect to his intentions concerning relatives or the natural objects of his bounty does not create a presumption of undue influence.<sup>79</sup> While the mere making of a new will materially changing the provisions of an old will has been held to raise no presumption of fraud,<sup>80</sup> particularly where cogent reasons for changing the prior provisions exist,<sup>81</sup> a will executed by the testator while ill and feeble, and containing unnatural provisions and differing from a former will or wills executed by him while in good health, must be shown by the beneficiaries to have been executed by the testator while free from restraint, before it will be held valid.<sup>82</sup>

§ 244. — Kindness and Attention

Acts of kindness and attention toward the testator by a beneficiary under the will do not create a presumption of undue influence, or shift the burden of proof

Undue influence will not be presumed or the bur-

Consideration of provisions

Provisions of a will which are claimed to be unnatural may be considered as an element supporting an inference of undue influence when the testament is attacked on that ground, and the claim is made that by reason of undue influence the testator was induced to make an unreasonable or unjust discrimination against some of his heirs at law

§ 245. Admissibility of Evidence

- a. In general
- b. Circumstances attending execution of will
- c. Prior or subsequent wills

a. In General

Where the grounds of objection to the validity of a will are fraud and undue influence, the evidence is permitted to take a wide range, and it has been declared that every fact and circumstance, no matter how little its probative value, which throws light on these issues, is admissible.

Undue influence in the execution of a will is rarely susceptible of direct proof<sup>84</sup> Where the grounds of objection to the validity of a will are fraud and undue influence, the evidence is permitted to take a wide range and it has been declared that every fact and circumstance, no matter how little its probative value, which throws light on these issues is admissible,<sup>85</sup> and this is especially so

Facts occurring after execution of will

(1) "It is quite well settled, of course, that the time when a will is made is the time of primary importance to be considered in estimating . . . any question of undue influence over the testator. However, evidence of conditions and circumstances existing after that time may be considered only to serve as an aid to determine the primary question"

(2) "The general rule is that pleading and proof of facts subsequent to the execution of the will are inadmissible on the charge that the instrument is the product of undue influence and fraud. In a given situation, particularly on an issue of actual fraud, no facts tending to prove such fraud are irrelevant if they reasonably bear upon that issue"

Request to leave room after testator's death

Evidence that witness for proponent, after testator's death, requested everyone to leave the room except herself and husband of one of the beneficiaries "so they could pray for the body," was competent as showing a desire of proponent's witness to further conspiracy by placing will under testator's pillow where it was later found in order to make it appear that testator knew of and guarded will after its execution present when the will was executed<sup>4</sup> Such evidence must be inconsistent with any result other than the undue influence charged<sup>5</sup>

The range of inquiry may cover not only the provisions of the will itself, as discussed infra §§ 246-251, and the circumstances surrounding its execution, infra subdivision b of this section, but also the mental condition of the testator, infra § 246, the motive and opportunity of others to unduly influence him, infra § 250, his relations with persons benefited by, or excluded from, the will, infra § 249, and the acts and declarations of such persons, infra § 247, since, although none of these matters, standing alone, may be sufficient to establish the issues, nevertheless taken together they may have that effect

b. Circumstances Attending Execution of Will

Relevant evidence of the circumstances attending the execution of the will is admissible to show that an undue advantage of the testator was taken at that time

Relevant<sup>6</sup> evidence of the circumstances attending the execution of the will is admissible to show that an undue advantage of the testator was taken at that time<sup>7</sup> The fact that the will was not read to the testator and that he did not know its contents has been held admissible to show undue influence<sup>8</sup> Activity of the beneficiaries in procuring or superintending the making of the will has been held admissible<sup>9</sup>

Codicil Evidence that undue influence was exercised or sought to be exercised at the time of the execution of a codicil is admissible on the issue of undue influence at the time of the making of the will<sup>10</sup>

c. Prior or Subsequent Wills

Although there is authority to the contrary, some jurisdictions allow former wills to be introduced in evidence on the issue of undue influence Under some circumstances a subsequent will may be admissible

In some jurisdictions former wills may be introduced in evidence for the purpose of showing the testamentary intent expressed in such instruments, the harmony or inconsistency of the provisions of the will in question with such intent being material in determining whether such will was made freely or under restraint,<sup>11</sup> and this rule applies to former wills which were not published<sup>12</sup> or which were

Codicil The lapse of time between the execution of the will and the execution of the codicil may be considered<sup>17</sup>

Subsequent will. The fact that a subsequent will was a complete confirmation of the wishes of the testator, as expressed in his first will, may be taken as a circumstance tending to refute the charge of undue influence<sup>18</sup>

§ 246. — Physical and Mental Condition of Testator

The physical and mental condition of the testator, together with his age, is, under an issue of undue influence, a proper subject for consideration by the jury, and evidence tending to show such condition is admissible.

Since the strength or weakness of mind of the testator and his susceptibility to influence are important in determining whether undue influence was exerted, as discussed supra § 233, the physical and mental condition of the testator, together with his age, is, under an issue of undue influence, a proper subject for consideration by the jury, and evidence tending to show such condition is admissible<sup>19</sup> For example, evidence of the testator's intoxication at the time of making the will,<sup>20</sup> the impairment of his mind by excessive use of alcohol,<sup>21</sup> his use of drugs,<sup>22</sup> or that drugs were administered prior to the execution of the will,<sup>23</sup> his oddities,<sup>24</sup> that he attempted to devise property not his own,<sup>25</sup> his advanced age,<sup>26</sup> the time elapsing between the execution of the will

§ 247. — Declarations of Testator

While declarations of the testator, made at the time of the execution of the will, or so near thereto as to be part of the res gestæ, are admissible in evidence to show fraud or undue influence, declarations made either before or after the execution of the will, but not part of the res gestæ, are mere hearsay and are not admissible as direct evidence of the exercise of fraud or undue influence. Such declarations may be received in evidence, however, to show the state and condition of the testator's mind.

Declarations of the testator, made at the time of the execution of the will, or so near thereto as to be part of the res gestæ, are admissible in evidence to show that a mistake was or was not made, or that fraud or undue influence was or was not exerted on him.<sup>41</sup> Declarations made either before or after the execution of the will, but not part of the res gestæ, are mere hearsay and are not admissible as direct evidence of the exercise of fraud or undue influence.<sup>42</sup> They may be received in evidence, howprovided it is not incompetent as an invasion of the privacy of the marital relationship,<sup>46</sup> or his intentions as to how he should dispose of his property,<sup>47</sup> as these matters are important in determining whether the dispositions which he does make are natural and consistent, or are the products of fraud or undue influence. In some cases, where there has been other independent evidence of undue influence, declarations of the testator have been admitted as corroborative evidence,<sup>48</sup> and on the other hand, it is held that such declarations are admitted only as corroborative evidence, and cannot properly be received where there has been no foundation laid with other evidence.<sup>49</sup> Thus, where undue influence is shown by other evidence, the testator's declarations may be admitted in evidence, not to show the existence or exercise of such influence, but to show the effect it had on his mind.<sup>50</sup> When the courts do permit the declaration of a testator to be received in evidence, they do so with great caution and confine it strictly to the purpose for which it is admitted.<sup>51</sup>

Part of conversation. Declarations of a testator are sometimes admitted on the ground that they are part of a conversation, the rest of which is competent,<sup>52</sup> as when the other party to the conversation was a legatee, as considered infra § 250.

Letter from attorney to testator. A letter from the attorney, who drafted the will, to the testator asking if the testator desired any further changes, becomes an approval of the will as drafted, where the testator makes no changes, and can be regarded as in the nature of a declaration by the testator that the will as written was consistent with the previously declared intention of the testator.<sup>53</sup> show the exercise of undue influence or fraud is admissible.<sup>99</sup> As circumstances tending in some slight degree to furnish ground for an inference of fraud or undue influence, it is proper to consider the character of the proponents and beneficiaries,<sup>1</sup> any interest or motive on their part unduly to influence the testator,<sup>2</sup> and facts and surroundings giving them an opportunity to exercise such influence.<sup>3</sup> Also it is generally proper to admit evidence, in so far as it tends to show fraud or undue influence, of their acts, conduct, and declarations in the presence of the testator,<sup>4</sup> or the presence of another person, when done or said at the time of the execution of the will or so near thereto as to constitute a part of the res gestæ,<sup>5</sup> or where done after the execution of the will if tending to show a purpose of the one exercising the influence to keep the testator under control.<sup>6</sup> Evidence of none of these matters is admissible, however, when it is of such a character that it has no clear bearing on the questions of fraud and undue influence,<sup>7</sup> particularly if made after the

§ 251. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

Undue influence, invalidating a will induced thereby, must be established by a preponderance of the evidence, and according to some authorities, by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence

According to some authorities, a preponderance of the evidence is necessary and sufficient to establish undue influence in the execution of a will<sup>28</sup> However, in numerous cases, it has been said that undue influence, invalidating a will, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence<sup>29</sup> by compelling evidence,<sup>30</sup> or by the manifest weight of the evidence<sup>31</sup> In any event, undue influence in the execution of a will must be shown by substantial evidence<sup>32</sup> and evidence which merely raises a suspicion or conjecture that the will was the product of undue influence is insufficient,<sup>33</sup>

but proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not required<sup>34</sup> It is not sufficient that the evidence be consistent with the hypothesis that the will was obtained by undue influence, but it is necessary that the evidence be inconsistent with a contrary hypothesis<sup>35</sup> The proof should be to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury, not to their satisfaction<sup>36</sup>

In determining whether a will was the product of undue influence, the evidence is to be considered as a whole<sup>37</sup> The testimony of the draftsman of the will, especially if he is an attorney, is always important in deciding the question of undue influence<sup>38</sup> Undue influence is established not by the number of witnesses, but by the character and force of their testimony<sup>39</sup> Evidence insufficient to support a finding that the conduct of the person charged with exercising undue influence was improper will not support a finding that the execution of the will was induced by undue influence<sup>40</sup> A presumption or indicia of undue influence may be rebutted and explained<sup>41</sup> A failure to call the subscribing witness is a circumstance to be considered on the question of undue influence, but is not conclusive<sup>42</sup>

§ 252. — Personal, Confidential, or Fiduciary Relations between Testator and Beneficiary

The rules as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to establish undue influence in the execution of a will have been applied in the light of the relationship between the beneficiary and the testator.

In accordance with the conflict discussed supra § 239 as to whether the existence of a fiduciary or confidential relationship between the testator and a beneficiary under the will creates a presumption of undue influence, it has been held that, in the absence of any other evidence, the fact that one in a fiduciary or confidential relation to the testator is benefited by his will may support a finding of undue influence,<sup>46</sup> although it is generally held that the mere fact of benefit in a will to one in a confidential<sup>47</sup> or fiduciary<sup>48</sup> relation to the testator is not sufficient, of itself, to warrant a conclusion that the execution of the will was induced by undue influence. However, as discussed supra § 230, such a situation excites suspicion, warranting a close scrutiny of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will and slight evidence that such a beneficiary abused testator's confidence will invalidate the will.<sup>49</sup> The slightest suggestion of one in the

Specific acts

The conduct of a trusted advisor prior to making of will, in which he is named as beneficiary, may be such as to amount to undue influence voiding the will, without proof of specific acts of the advisor at time will was made

Mass—Doggett v Moise, 12 NE 2d 867, 299 Mass 383.

confidential relation of attorney to a testator, especially where such attorney is the beneficiary under the will, may constitute undue influence.<sup>50</sup> The fact that the testator was under the influence of another in the management and control of his business generally is insufficient to prove undue influence in the execution of the will.<sup>51</sup> A will by a physically or mentally infirm testator in favor of person having custody of testator, is regarded with suspicion.<sup>52</sup> Evidence of affection or intimacy between persons related by blood or marriage does not establish undue influence.<sup>53</sup>

The rules as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to establish undue influence in the execution of a will have been applied where the relation between the testator and a beneficiary has been that of attorney and client,<sup>54</sup> physician and patient,<sup>55</sup> nurse and patient,<sup>56</sup> employer and employee,<sup>57</sup> landlord and tenant,<sup>58</sup> husband and wife,<sup>59</sup> persons who

Suspicion

A will, made in favor of testatrix' lawyer to exclusion of natural object of her bounty, is viewed with great suspicion and, in absence of explanation, jury may be justified in drawing inference of beneficiary's undue influence over testatrix, but will is not invalid if fairly made

§ 253. — Unlawful, Improper, or Meretricious Relations between Testator and Beneficiary

The existence of improper, illicit, unlawful, or meretricious relations between the beneficiary and the testator is insufficient, of itself, to establish undue influence in the execution of the will

The mere existence of illicit, improper, unlawful, or meretricious relations between the testator and the beneficiary<sup>68</sup> or the beneficiary's mother<sup>69</sup> is insufficient of itself to prove fraud or undue influence, although the existence of such relations is an important fact to be considered by the jury along with other evidence of undue influence,<sup>70</sup> giving to other circumstances a significance which they might not otherwise have,<sup>71</sup> and much less evidence will be required to establish undue influence on the part of one holding wrongful and meretricious relations with the testator<sup>72</sup> Thus, when such a relation is shown, and it also appears that the testator made a highly unnatural disposition of his property as a result of restraint, or any other agency which poisoned his mind, there is sufficient evidence of undue influence<sup>73</sup>

§ 254. — Direct or Indirect Benefit to Person Drawing or Assisting in Execution of Will

General rules have been applied as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to establish undue influence where the beneficiary drafted or participated in the preparation and execution of the will

Under the facts and circumstances of the particular case, the evidence has been held sufficient<sup>74</sup> or insufficient<sup>75</sup> to establish undue influence by a beneficiary who drafted or arranged for the preparation and execution of the will Unless such fact, under the rules discussed supra § 241, is sufficient to raise a presumption of undue influence, the fact, standing alone, that the beneficiary,<sup>76</sup> or that a relative of the beneficiary,<sup>77</sup> drafted the will, or took an important part in its preparation and execution,<sup>78</sup> is insufficient to prove undue influence, but it is such a strong circumstance bearing on the probability that fraud or undue influence was exercised<sup>79</sup> that only slight additional proof is necessary to establish the issue.<sup>80</sup> It has been held that a will written or procured to be written by one largely benefited by it excites suspicion, and requires stricter scrutiny and stricter proof of the free agency of the testator.<sup>81</sup> Where the participation of the beneficiary in the preparation of the will raises a presumption of undue influence, the amount of proof required to overcome the presumption must depend on the circumstances of each case.<sup>82</sup> Under a statute requiring the testator to have independent advice where the will is prepared by the principal beneficiary, general rules apply as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence to show compliance with the statute.<sup>83</sup> The participation of the beneficiary in the execution of the will may not rest on conjecture but must be established by evidence from which the necessary inferences can reasonably be drawn.<sup>84</sup>

The fact that the beneficiary selected the attorney who drew the will,<sup>85</sup> and procured the attesting witnesses thereto,<sup>86</sup> or was present<sup>87</sup> or absent<sup>88</sup> at the execution of the will, is alone insufficient to prove undue influence, although the absence of the person charged with exercising undue influence is not necessarily sufficient to prove that such influence was not exerted.<sup>89</sup> Moreover, the fact that the will was prepared by an attorney selected by the beneficiary and that the attorney never consulted the testator, but received all information from the beneficiary is a circumstance indicating undue influence.<sup>90</sup>

Parent and child The evidence has been held insufficient in particular cases to establish undue influence although the preparation and execution of a will in favor of the child were arranged by the child,<sup>91</sup> but the facts that a child occupying a fiduciary relationship with the testator was the active agent in having the will prepared,<sup>92</sup> that he procured its preparation by his agent, a stranger to the testator,<sup>93</sup> that he and his agent alone were present with her when it was drawn,<sup>94</sup> that the testator was the dependent party, and he the dominant party,<sup>95</sup> and that he profited substantially by the will,<sup>96</sup> particularly where the testator was enfeebled by old age and disease,<sup>97</sup> have been held to be circumstances tending to show the exercise of undue influence.

Confidential relation Under the facts and circumstances of the particular case, the evidence has been held sufficient<sup>98</sup> or insufficient<sup>99</sup> to establish undue influence where the will was prepared by, or under the guidance of, a beneficiary who stood in a confidential relationship with the testator. Thus, where the attorney who drafted the will was named executor or beneficiary, the evidence has been held sufficient<sup>1</sup> or insufficient<sup>2</sup> under the particular facts and circumstances to establish undue influence.

Attesting witnesses When the character of persons acting as attesting witnesses is implicated by any circumstances connecting them with the sole beneficiary, it has been held that their testimony of the testator's freedom from undue influence is entitled to little weight.<sup>3</sup>

Lack of benefit The fact that the person charged with having procured the execution of the will by the exercise of undue influence cannot derive any benefit from the will,<sup>4</sup> or receives less under the will in question than he received under a prior will,<sup>5</sup> has been held to be a strong circumstance showing the absence of undue influence.

Lack of participation. The fact that the beneficiaries did not actively participate in preparation or execution of the will is evidence that they did not unduly influence the testator.<sup>6</sup>

§ 255. — Unjust, Unequal, or Unnatural Provisions

Unjust, unnatural, or unequal provisions in a will are insufficient of themselves to establish that the execution of the will was induced by undue influence, but such provisions are a circumstance to be considered with other evidence of undue influence.

Unjust, unequal, or unnatural provisions in the will are insufficient alone to show undue influence.<sup>7</sup>

Unnatural disposition

(1) A will when made in favor of attorney who drafted it and to exclusion of natural objects of testator's bounty is viewed with great suspicion, and some proof is required beside the factum of the will before will can be sustained

NY.—In re Little's Will, 45 NYS 2d 751.

(2) Ordinarily, that a will was drawn under the direction of the sole beneficiary thereof, who was legal adviser of deceased, and that the will was unnatural in that those related to deceased by ties of blood were excluded from his bounty in favor of a stranger, are circumstances sufficient to warrant an inference of undue influence

This is true, although the testator gives the greater portion of a large estate to one of his children,<sup>8</sup> to his wife,<sup>9</sup> or husband,<sup>10</sup> or to strangers, to the exclusion of his own blood,<sup>11</sup> or although the natural objects of the testator's bounty receive less under the will than if he had died intestate.<sup>12</sup> An unjust, unequal, or unnatural disposition may be an important circumstance when considered with other evidence of undue influence,<sup>13</sup> and it has been held that, where a disposition is unaccountably unnatural, less evidence is required to establish undue influence.<sup>14</sup> According to some authority it is only when the will is grossly unreasonable in its provisions, and plainly inconsistent with the testator's duty to his family, that, in case of doubt, the inequality can have any effect on the question of undue influence.<sup>15</sup> In determining the weight that should be given an unnatural disposition of the testator's property circumstances surrounding the execution of the will<sup>16</sup> and the extent to which the distribution deviates from a natural one<sup>17</sup> should be considered. Where a will is in accordance with the dictates of natural justice, it indicates a lack of undue influence and evidence of undue influence to nullify it must be strong.<sup>18</sup>

The fact that the will contained unnatural, unjust, or unequal provisions has been held under the particular facts and circumstances of the case to be sufficient<sup>19</sup> or insufficient<sup>20</sup> to establish undue influence

What constitutes unnatural will A will is unnatural in a legal sense only when it is contrary to what the testator, from his views, feelings, and intentions, would have been expected to make<sup>21</sup> When it is in accordance with such views, it is not unnatural, however much it may differ from the ordinary actions of men in similar circumstances<sup>22</sup> Whether a will which discriminates among the relatives of the testator is unnatural or unjust depends on their conduct toward the testator, his feelings toward them, and the financial condition of the respective parties<sup>23</sup> The mere fact that the testator makes provision for his spouse,<sup>24</sup> does not provide for all his children equally,<sup>25</sup> makes a larger bequest to one relative than to another,<sup>26</sup> or the fact that close friends are remembered rather than distant relatives,<sup>27</sup> does not necessarily render the will unnatural The nephews and nieces of the testator's deceased spouse are not the natural objects of his bounty<sup>28</sup>

§ 256. — Opportunity or Disposition to Exercise Undue Influence

Mere proof of opportunity to influence the mind of the testator is insufficient to establish undue influence

Although, in determining whether or not undue influence was exerted in procuring the will, the court should consider the opportunity of the parties to exercise such influence,<sup>29</sup> mere proof of opportunity

Undue influence is established where it is shown that the testator was subject to such influence, that the opportunity to exercise it existed, that there was a disposition to exercise it, and the result appears to be the effect of such influence,<sup>39</sup> and where any three of these four elements are established, very little evidence of the fourth element is required to prove undue influence<sup>40</sup>

§ 257. — Declarations of Testator and Others

While they may be significant in connection with other evidence, declarations of the testator should not be given conclusive weight on the issues of fraud and undue influence

In the absence of other evidence tending to prove fraud or undue influence, conclusive weight should not be given to declarations of the testator,<sup>41</sup> not contemporaneous with the making of the will,<sup>42</sup> as, for example, of a desire to destroy the will,<sup>43</sup> to the effect that the instrument in question is his will,<sup>44</sup> that he had made no will,<sup>45</sup> that he had been unduly influenced to make the will,<sup>46</sup> that he was dissatisfied with some provisions of his will,<sup>47</sup> of things the proponent had told him,<sup>48</sup> or that he intended to dispose of his property by will in a certain way<sup>49</sup>

Declarations of the testator may be significant in connection with other evidence of undue influence,<sup>50</sup> and it has been held that an entire change from former testamentary intentions is a strong circumstance to support a claim of undue influence.<sup>51</sup> Evidence of declarations consistent with the will is entitled to weight.<sup>52</sup> In the absence of evidence of undue influence, statements of people other than the testator showing a disposition unduly to influence the testator have little evidentiary value.<sup>53</sup> Declarations made by a testator while he was insane have no weight as evidence.<sup>54</sup>

§ 258. — Physical or Mental Condition of Testator

While the testator's physical or mental weakness is not of itself sufficient to establish undue influence, it is a factor of considerable weight

To some extent the undue influence sufficient to set aside a will must depend on the physical and mental condition of the testator.<sup>55</sup> The two are intimately connected,<sup>56</sup> and what would be undue influence in a case of physical and mental weakness would not be undue influence where the testator was in full possession of his mental faculties.<sup>57</sup> The feebleness of the mind of the testator, no matter from what cause, the less evidence will be required to invalidate the will of such person,<sup>58</sup> conversely, very strong evidence is required to show undue influence where testator was of strong mind and determined nature.<sup>59</sup>

Evidence of physical weakness,<sup>60</sup> or weakness of mind,<sup>61</sup> on the part of the testator, standing alone

Falsity of statement

Evidence that testatrix made statement that sole residuary legatee had informed her that one or more of relatives of testatrix' husband wanted to put her in an insane asylum was held insufficient to sustain finding of fraud on part of sole residuary legatee in absence of proof that, even though statement had been made by legatee, legatee's statement was false is not sufficient to establish undue influence, but it is entitled to considerable weight,<sup>62</sup> and very little additional proof is required to justify a finding that the will was procured by undue influence.<sup>63</sup> Thus, undue influence may be deemed established, when there is evidence of the testator's weak mental condition combined with evidence that the will is inconsistent with a prior intent, expressed either in his declarations,<sup>64</sup> or in a former will,<sup>65</sup> or combined with evidence of an unnatural disposition.<sup>66</sup> The circumstances attending the execution of a will by a testator who is dangerously ill and expecting to die, at a time when he is surrounded exclusively by those who benefit by it, are subject to close scrutiny.<sup>67</sup> On the other hand, evidence of the strength of the testator's mind is entitled to considerable weight,<sup>68</sup> and before the will of a testator possessing a strong and healthy mind will be set aside the proof should fairly and convincingly lead to the conclusion of undue influence.<sup>69</sup>

In particular cases, the evidence has been held sufficient<sup>70</sup> or insufficient,<sup>71</sup> in the light of the testator's mental and physical condition, to establish undue influence.

§ 259 — Secrecy in Execution

Secrecy as to the terms or execution of a will does not establish undue influence

The fact that the testator did not divulge the terms of the will,<sup>72</sup> or did not tell that he had made a will,<sup>73</sup> or secrecy in the execution of the will and suppression by the beneficiaries of the fact of its existence,<sup>74</sup> or the fact that the beneficiary failed to inform disinherited relatives of the execution of the will,<sup>75</sup> has been held to be insufficient alone to show undue influence, but it has also been held that the fact that the beneficiaries kept execution of the will a secret from those who had an equal right to know of its execution is a badge of fraud or undue influence.<sup>76</sup> The fact that the will was prepared in accordance with directions given the draftsman by the testator when no one else was present is strong evidence of a lack of undue influence.<sup>77</sup> Execution of a will with great formality in the presence of many persons negatives undue influence.<sup>78</sup>

Exclusion of contestants from presence of testator The exclusion by the beneficiaries of the contestant from the presence of the testator is alone insufficient to prove undue influence,<sup>79</sup> although when considered with other evidence of undue influence it is entitled to considerable weight.<sup>80</sup> According to some authority the evidence, where the testator was surrounded exclusively by the beneficiaries at the execution of the will, must be weighed in the light of the fact that the circumstances surrounding the immediate execution of the will were within the exclusive knowledge of those upholding it while the opportunity of acquiring such knowledge was withheld from the contestants.<sup>81</sup>

§ 260. — Prior Wills

The mere fact that the testator's prior will contained different provisions is insufficient to establish undue influence.

Prior wills containing similar provisions have been held to be entitled to considerable weight to show that the will is not the result of undue influence.<sup>82</sup> Prior wills containing different dispositions than the one in question have been held to be insufficient to show undue influence,<sup>83</sup> particularly where there is evidence explaining the change,<sup>84</sup> but a change from the disposition made by a prior will is a circumstance to be considered on the question of undue influence,<sup>85</sup> particularly where the change is from a natural to an unnatural disposition.<sup>86</sup> A change from a will embodying a careful plan of distribution to one benefiting the person charged with undue influence is an important element for consideration on the question of undue influence.<sup>87</sup>

§ 261. — Indirect or Circumstantial Evidence

The execution of the will as the result of undue influence may be established by circumstantial evidence, the circumstances must be so connected and of such probative force as to lead to a reasonable conclusion that undue influence was exercised, and must be inconsistent with an absence of undue influence.

Since fraud and undue influence are rarely susceptible of direct proof, such proof is not required,<sup>88</sup>

Beneficiary in position to help testator

Fact that person who allegedly exerted undue influence on the maker of a will was in position to do nice things for the testator is equally consistent with theories of innocence and of wrongdoing on part of such person, and, thus, there must in addition be some evidence of tangible nature that such influence was in fact exercised.

fraud, and are not explained in any way, are sufficient to sustain a finding of fraud <sup>98</sup>

The relationship between the testator and the beneficiary, as discussed supra §§ 252, 253, the participation of the beneficiary in the preparation and execution of the will, supra § 254, the nature of the distribution made by the will, supra § 255, opportunity and disposition to exercise undue influence, supra § 256, declarations of the testator and others, supra § 257, the physical and mental condition of the testator, supra § 258, secrecy as to the execution or terms of the will, supra § 259, and prior wills, supra § 260, are among the facts and circumstances which are to be given significant weight in determining whether the will was the product of undue influence <sup>99</sup> Fact that the alleged wrongdoer had the power or ability to control the testamentary act may be established by a variety of circumstances, such as control over the decedent's business affairs, dependency of the decedent on the beneficiary for care and attention, or domination on the part of the beneficiary and subserviency on the part of the testator <sup>1</sup>

The circumstances may be such that, taken together, they are sufficient to establish undue influence, although each circumstance by itself would be insufficient to support such a conclusion <sup>2</sup> Accordingly, it is only when considered in connection with other circumstances that weight is given to prior hostility between the proponents and the contestants, <sup>3</sup> that the testator did not have independent advice, <sup>4</sup> a departure by the draftsman of the will, in one clause, from the instructions of the testator, <sup>5</sup> the failure of the attorney who drafted the will to question the testator privately, <sup>6</sup> the failure of the proponent, charged with exercising undue influence, to testify, <sup>7</sup> the fact that the beneficiaries advised the testator to bring a suit against one of the contestants, <sup>8</sup> the failure of the attestation clause to contain any negation of undue influence, <sup>9</sup> the failure of a stranger, before consenting to be a beneficiary, sufficiently to inquire of the testatrix concerning the situation of her property and her relation to her next of kin, <sup>10</sup> general good or bad treatment of the testator, <sup>11</sup> the fact that a beneficiary knew that the testator had made a will <sup>12</sup> or intended to make a will containing provisions in his favor, <sup>13</sup> the testator's belief in spiritualism, <sup>14</sup> belief of the husband that he would survive his wife who was chief beneficiary under his will, <sup>15</sup> the fact that the testator's wife requested him to appoint her executrix of his will, <sup>16</sup> the fact that the testator lived with the beneficiary, <sup>17</sup> suspicious circumstances in the conduct of a legatee toward the testator, <sup>18</sup> assent of the proponent to certain legacies in the will, <sup>19</sup> or the fact that the testator believed the devisee to be his child, which in fact he was not <sup>20</sup>

The fact that the testator himself drew up the will has been held to be convincing evidence of the absence of undue influence <sup>21</sup> An unexplained inter vivos transfer of property by the testator to the person alleged to have exercised undue influence is a circumstance tending to prove undue influence <sup>22</sup> A meaningless or inconsistent statement in the will is not evidence of undue influence<sup>23</sup> The fact that the lawyer who drafted the will and the witnesses to its execution observed no undue influence is not conclusive as to the absence of undue influence<sup>24</sup>

Testimony of legatee The testimony of the legatee, charged with having obtained the will by undue influence, unless contradicted by some other credible testimony,<sup>25</sup> or discredited by its improbability,<sup>26</sup> cannot be arbitrarily disregarded,<sup>27</sup> and it has been held, in the absence of contradicting evidence, that his testimony may be sufficient to sustain a finding that undue influence was not exerted,<sup>28</sup> and this is true, although the circumstances of the case, such as a confidential relationship between the testator and beneficiary, might raise a presumption of undue influence<sup>29</sup>

Failure to change or revoke will Although conclusive weight should not be given it,<sup>30</sup> the fact that a testator having the capacity and ability to do so failed for a substantial period of time to change or revoke a will alleged to be the product of undue influence negatives the claim of undue influence<sup>31</sup>

Proof of formal execution Under conditions giving rise to a presumption against the validity of the will, mere formal proof of the execution is insufficient to show the absence of undue influence<sup>32</sup>

Opinion evidence has been declared to be entitled to consideration only as far as it is sustained by facts<sup>33</sup>

Remote matters. Matters occurring a long time after the execution of the will have been held to be entitled to little weight<sup>34</sup> In the absence of connecting evidence, circumstances not relevant to the issue of undue influence have no weight<sup>35</sup>
